A GIGANTIC PLOT.

How Manhattan Elevated Railway Employers Planned to Rob the Company.

By Telegram to the Post-Dispatch.

New York, July 3.—This is really a gigantic scheme—one of the most clever frauds that has ever come into this office, said Inspector Byrnes yesterday. He spoke of a plot to rob the elevated railroads by a system of wholesale ticket forging.

A month ago Col. E. H. Hain, general manager of the Manhattan Railroad, told the inspector that some of his employees were in collusion with outside parties to swindle the corporation by placing forged tickets at several stations. These tickets, Col. Hain said, were of both the five and ten cent denominations and were executed with amazing cleverness.

It was not a slight difference in the weight and quality of the paper, it would be impossible to distinguish them from the genuine ticket, without a microscope. Inspector Byrnes detailed Detective Sergeant Slevin, Frink and Richard O'Connor to watch certain men named by Col. Hain. After several days the officers became satisfied that one of the conspirators was William H. Pender, agent in the up-town station at Twenty-third street, on the Sixth Avenue Line.

Pender was arrested on Tuesday morning. On his person were found a large number of genuine tickets and a small parcel of counterfeit ones. The officers also discovered a letter signed J. B. Cole. Pender was taken to headquarters. He is 30 years old and resides at No. 345 West Avenue, Jersey City. Some time ago John B. Cole was dismissed from the company's service for irregularities in his accounts, but was reinstated through the influence of powerful friends. For three years he had been agent in an important station on the line.

He could not live comfortably on his salary and devised a plan to augment his revenue at his employer's expense. In common with several others on the line he knew that all the ticket boxes on the platforms were unlocked with one key. Cole got possession of it for a few moments.

He was in and had a duplicate made. At moments in the quiet night, when the cars dozed serenely, Cole unlocked the box and removed several tickets. These he took to his home, No. 345 West Avenue, Woodside, N. J. In order to remove the punchmarks he rolled the tickets between two wet cloths and then he rolled them between his hands.

On Monday night the house was watched. On Tuesday morning the officers finished their work and upon arriving at Newark they found that the last train had departed. They walked to Jersey city and reached the quarters at 4 o'clock in the morning. Among the men who had been in Cole's company was August C. Speth, a Chicago photographer doing business at No. 59 Maiden Lane. The firm name is Speth & Co. August C. Speth is Charles August Speth, of 1253 Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn.

A GIGANTIC PLOT.

How Manhattan Elevated Railway Employers Planned to Rob the Company.

By Telegram to the Post-Dispatch.

New York, July 3.—This is really a gigantic scheme—one of the most clever frauds that has ever come into this office, said Inspector Byrnes yesterday. He spoke of a plot to rob the elevated railroads by a system of wholesale ticket forging.

A month ago Col. E. H. Hain, general manager of the Manhattan Railroad, told the inspector that some of his employees were in collusion with outside parties to swindle the corporation by placing forged tickets at several stations. These tickets, Col. Hain said, were of both the five and ten cent denominations and were executed with amazing cleverness.

It was not a slight difference in the weight and quality of the paper, it would be impossible to distinguish them from the genuine ticket, without a microscope. Inspector Byrnes detailed Detective Sergeant Slevin, Frink and Richard O'Connor to watch certain men named by Col. Hain. After several days the officers became satisfied that one of the conspirators was William H. Pender, agent in the up-town station at Twenty-third street, on the Sixth Avenue Line.

Pender was arrested on Tuesday morning. On his person were found a large number of genuine tickets and a small parcel of counterfeit ones. The officers also discovered a letter signed J. B. Cole. Pender was taken to headquarters. He is 30 years old and resides at No. 345 West Avenue, Jersey City. Some time ago John B. Cole was dismissed from the company's service for irregularities in his accounts, but was reinstated through the influence of powerful friends. For three years he had been agent in an important station on the line.

He could not live comfortably on his salary and devised a plan to augment his revenue at his employer's expense. In common with several others on the line he knew that all the ticket boxes on the platforms were unlocked with one key. Cole got possession of it for a few moments.

He was in and had a duplicate made. At moments in the quiet night, when the cars dozed serenely, Cole unlocked the box and removed several tickets. These he took to his home, No. 345 West Avenue, Woodside, N. J. In order to remove the punchmarks he rolled the tickets between two wet cloths and then he rolled them between his hands.

On Monday night the house was watched. On Tuesday morning the officers finished their work and upon arriving at Newark they found that the last train had departed. They walked to Jersey city and reached the quarters at 4 o'clock in the morning. Among the men who had been in Cole's company was August C. Speth, a Chicago photographer doing business at No. 59 Maiden Lane. The firm name is Speth & Co. August C. Speth is Charles August Speth, of 1253 Atlantic avenue, Brooklyn.
